Middle-aged Shona thinks she is content. Wife, mother and teacher, she lives in a quiet village in the same Northumbrian valley in which she was born. But an unexpected visit from an old flame makes her question her life. Suddenly, she feels taken for granted by her family and the village community, for which she does so much. When Jake asks her to leave the valley with him, Shona finds herself torn between two worlds. Will she leave her home and family for a second chance with Jake? Or will her family convince her to stay? 'All She Ever Wanted' is moving romantic tale about missed opportunities and second chances. Miranda Barnes has lived in Northumberland nearly all her life, and most of her romantic fiction is set in the area she has come to love. Contemporary and authentic, her novels focus on the loves and lives of local people - shop assistants, craft workers, and farming and fishing folk. Her other titles include 'New Beginnings' and 'A Place of Her Own'. Endeavour Press is the UK's leading independent publisher of digital books.
