What if, as you were placing the last piece of a puzzle, the table flipped and all the pieces fell to the ground, the picture forever destroyed. That is a feeling Julia Morreau knows all too well. On the day she received the news that all her hard work and sacrifice had paid off and she would finally have the career of her dreams, she also lost the three people she loved most. Six years later she has completely shut out everything but that career. She's content with the fact that she once had her soulmate and that those memories must last her a lifetime. What she's not prepared for is her new partner at work, Derick Edmunds. He's everything she never thought she'd ever want again, and even if, never thought she'd find. He's brought her back to life and selfish as it may be she can't give him up, but she can't give him the truth either. Can a woman, whose life has revolved around a tragedy trust the second chance she's being given?
