Is it possible to find a lasting relationship and true love when all you've ever heard are lies from those closest to you? Suzanne hopes to find out as she embarks on a summer cruise with her best friend, Heather. But will she? Or will it be more of the old same ole, same ole? Two months is all the time it took for Suzanne Conway's life to unravel. Her fiancé jilted her for her cousin, her mother left for some fancy resort with a guy she met a week ago, and her father ran off to parts unknown with a gangster's daughter and a great deal of the hood's money. Suzanne decided to take a cruise hoping to bring some joy back into her life. A simple shipboard romance with fellow passenger handsome Thad Novak just might be the way to cheer her up. But her plans for a fresh start get complicated when a mysterious man presses a black feather in her hand aboard ship and tells her she's been warned. Warned about what? Things get even more confusing when she and Thad go ashore in Belize and find themselves dodging bullets while being chased through the jungle. They end up hiding out in a house there and Suzanne soon learns the gentle Thad she met on the ship is really a gun toting tough guy. She becomes increasingly wary when he begins questioning her about her father's whereabouts. Is he a good man trying to protect her? Or a bad thug working for the mob? Suzanne is beginning to think she should give up on men considering her bad luck with the male species. But first she has to concentrate on staying alive.
