Fight With The Devil (An Exiting Thriller Story) Maria Baker

After almost 40 years in Alaska, Maria Isabella Smith-Baer now has more than 30 relatives with which to share Thanksgiving dinner. The Youngstown, Ohio native, a product of generations of steel mill workers of Italian descent, moved to Anchorage with her parents and siblings in 1977. The steel mills were closing one by one, while the newly built Alaskan Oil Pipeline needed hundreds of employees. So, the family of six moved as far away from Youngstown, Maria's friends, and especially, Stephen Diabsky--the love of her life.

Anchorage was nothing like Youngstown. By the 21st century, all four Smith children were married, had children, and some grandchildren of their own. They all lived within a three-mile radius of the family home. The family grew every year, but Mama still insisted on having everyone over to celebrate Thanksgiving and Christmas.

Four years ago, Maria experienced a horrific, life-altering ordeal at Thanksgiving dinner. Not only has she moved to Seattle, Washington by herself, but also she wasn't able to speak for two years and sees a therapist on a daily basis, trying to make sense of that day.

Dr. Inglemoor asked Maria to write her version of events that occurred on that fateful day. As she relives the tragedy of four years earlier, she begins to find a small sense of peace within her tormented heart and soul.

Read Maria's words as she remembers that family really does mean everything... No matter what.
