This is primarily a compilation of the descriptive matter published in some 200 four-page leaflets included with the Blue Amberols from their introduction in November, 1912 until the direct recording process by which they were made was changed to an inferior "dubbing" techniques around the beginning of 1915. --- The descriptions of the cylinders in these leaflets were essentially the same as those in the Edison monthly record supplements, but the supplements did not include lists of additional records by the same artists or references to other selections similar in style. There was a large amount of information on the composers and publishers of the music, as well as some on the artists. Sometimes there are accounts of what inspired a song writer to pen a certain number - entertaining and informative. ---- There is also a historical overview of the hardware and process. A fascinating history!
